

Michela Andreatta teaches Hebrew language and literature at University of Rochester. She received her PhD from University of Turin, Italy with a dissertation on Hebrew into Latin translations made for the Italian humanist Giovanni Pico della Mirandola (published by Olschki, Florence in 2009). Her fields of research and publication lie in the intellectual and literary history of Italian Jews in the early modern period, literary intersections of Italian and Hebrew cultures, Christian Hebraism and the Hebrew book culture in Italy. She has been a research fellow at The Hebrew University of Jerusalem (as a recipient of a Hanadiv-Beracha Foundation grant), the Centre for Hebrew and Jewish Studies at Oxford University, the Center for Jewish Studies at Harvard University and the Center for Advanced Judaic Studies at University of Pennsylvania. Her current project—the first annotated English translation of Moshe Zacuto's Tofteh 'Arukh—is being funded by an individual grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities.
