

Nicole Archambeau is an associate professor of History at Colorado State University. Her publications uncover medieval understandings of sickness, remedy, and healing practitioners. Her book, Souls under Siege: Stories of War, Plague, and Confession in 14th Century Provence, explores the sufferers' point of view of catastrophe through canonization inquest narratives. Her present research project explores the intersections of health, medicine, and agriculture through bees and their products.