

Aliosha Bielenberg is a PhD student in the Department of Rhetoric at the University of California, Berkeley. He previously received his MA from the Institute of Philosophy at KU Leuven (Belgium) and his MSc in Digital Cultural Heritage from the Cyprus Institute. He earned his bachelor's degree from Brown University, with concentrations in Archaeology and the Ancient World and Critical Thought and Global Social Inquiry. At Berkeley, he is also completing a Designated Emphasis in the Study of Religion. His immediate research focus is in the history and society of Cyprus, with broad philosophical and anthropological interests in objects, objectivity, heritage, and world-making. His work has previously appeared in Eidolon, Taxis, Amor Mundi, and The Point.