

Christine Chism is a professor of English at UCLA, who received a Mellon New Directions grant in 2004 to learn Arabic and study premodern Islamicate cultures. Since then, she has explored encounters between premodern Muslim and Latin Christian writers, through travel narratives, crusading accounts, and shared literary traditions such as the Alexander romance and Mediterranean literary studies.