

Naama Cohen-Hanegbi is a Senior Lecturer of Medieval History at Tel Aviv University. Her research explores medicine and health as prisms for cultural history of late medieval Southern Europe. Her book Caring for the Living Soul: Emotions, Medicine and Penance in the Late Medieval Mediterranean (Brill, 2017) looks at the reciprocity between learned medicine and pastoral theology in their construction and treatment of emotions in the Western Mediterranean between 1200 and 1500. Her current project studies intellectual and scientific culture in Seville in the end of the 14th century and considers the efforts for Christianizing the health-scape of the city. Recent publications include the co-edited volume with Pirooska Nagy of Pleasure in the Middle Ages (Brepols, 2018); the edited cluster “Learning Practice from Texts: Jews and Medicine in the Later Middle Ages” in Social History of Medicine (2019); and the forthcoming “Postpartum Mental Distress in Late Medieval Europe” in The Mediaeval Journal.
