

Thomas Dandelelet is a professor of history at the University of California, Berkeley where he has taught since 2001. He previously held positions at Princeton University (1997-2001) and Bard College (1994-97).

The primary areas of Dandelelet's research broadly conceived have been the Spanish Empire's relationship with Italy in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, and the rise of new global Renaissance empires. His historical approach is to merge political, social, cultural and economic historical analysis in pursuit of a more fully articulated and integrated historical portrait of the subjects he treats. Research on these themes has led to the publication of Spanish Rome, 1500-1700, (New Haven: Yale University Press), 2001; La Roma Española, Spanish translation of Spanish Rome, 1500-1700, (Barcelona, Editorial Critica), 2002; Spain in Italy, 1500-1700, edited by Thomas Dandelelet and John Marino, (Brill, 2006); and The Renaissance of Empire in Early Modern Europe, New York: Cambridge University Press, 2014. In addition, Dandelelet has published over twenty articles or chapters in edited volumes on related themes.
