

Elijah Wallace is a Ph.D. candidate in Late Antique and Medieval History at the University of Minnesota Twin Cities. His main areas of interest are the transformation of the Later Roman Empire, Carolingian Italy, and, more generally, premodern military history. His dissertation, "Saints, Soldiers, and Society in the Late Roman West: Reassessing the End of Empire in fifth-century Italy and Illyricum," focuses upon Late Antique Christianity and its role in creating a new socio-military order and ethnic identities in the upper Danube basin and Italian peninsula during the fifth and sixth centuries CE.
