

Mayte Green-Mercado is an Assistant Professor of History at Rutgers University-Newark, where she teaches courses on medieval and early modern Mediterranean, Islamic, and Iberian history. She completed her PhD in the Department of Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations at the University of Chicago. She is the author of Visions of Deliverance. Moriscos and the Politics of Prophecy in the Early Modern Mediterranean, which came out in 2019 with Cornell University Press. She also guest edited a special issue in the Journal of the Economic and Social History of the Orient in 2018, titled “Speaking the End Times: Prophecy and Messianism in Early Modern Eurasia.” She has published articles and book chapters on Morisco apocalypticism, ethnic groups in early modern Spain, and forced conversion in early modern Iberia. Her research and teaching examine questions of interconfessional relations, intellectual networks in the Mediterranean, displacement and migration, and race and ethnicity. She is currently working on two projects: the first one looks at the displacement of Moriscos around the Mediterranean in the pre-expulsion period, from 1501 to 1607. The second one examines prophecy as a diplomatic discourse in the medieval and early modern Mediterranean. She is also preparing an updated English translation and edition of Ruy Gonzalez Clavijo’s 1406 Embassy to Tamerlane.