

Bio:

Mayte Green-Mercado is an Associate Professor of History and Director of the Institute for the Study of Global Racial Justice at Rutgers University—Newark. She also directs the Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies minor in the department of History. She teaches courses on Islamic civilization, medieval and early modern Mediterranean and Iberian history, race in the pre-modern Mediterranean, as well as migration and displacement. She has published articles on early modern apocalypticism, the conversion of Iberian Muslims, and race and ethnicity in early modern Spain. Her first book, Visions of Deliverance. Moriscos and the Politics of Prophecy in the Early Modern Mediterranean (Cornell, 2019), won the Wadjih F. al-Hamwi Prize for the Best First Book in Mediterranean Studies from The Mediterranean Seminar. It examines the political culture of Moriscos through their deployment of End Time prophecies. Her current book project, tentatively titled Mediterranean Displacements. Morisco Migrations in the Sixteenth Century traces Morisco migratory patterns around the Mediterranean basin before 1609. She is founder and co-director of the Mediterranean Displacements Project at Rutgers-Newark.
