

Matthew Harpster completed his PhD from Texas A&M University in 2005, and has since held research and teaching posts at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Eastern Mediterranean University, the University of Birmingham, and Koç University, where he is also the Director of KUDAR, the University's maritime archaeology research center. In addition to his publications on the construction of ancient ships, his research interests include maritime communities and maritime cultural landscapes, and the history of maritime archaeological thought. In 2023, he published his first book, Reconstructing a Maritime Past.