

Peter Kitlas (Ph.D., Near Eastern Studies, Princeton University) is a Postdoctoral Fellow at the Fox Center for Humanistic Inquiry at Emory University. He is currently working on his first monograph project, Islamic Diplomacies in a Connected Mediterranean, which investigates the conceptual frameworks, terminologies, and practices of Moroccan and Ottoman diplomats throughout the eighteenth-century Mediterranean. Reading across travelogues, biographical dictionaries, correspondence, and diplomatic manuals this book explores the role of Muslim actors and Islamic value systems in co-producing the modern international sphere. His work has appeared in Mediterranean Studies, the Journal of North African Studies, and the Encyclopedia of Islam 3. He is also the editor of the Spain North Africa Project's online bulletin, which uses StoryMaps and digital media to promote public-facing adaptations of scholarly research.
