

Short Biography

Anne Le is the Public Humanities Postdoctoral Fellow at the Medieval Institute of the University of Notre Dame. She earned her PhD in French and Francophone Studies from the University of California, Los Angeles. Her research focuses on the representation of religious conversion in twelfth- and thirteen-century Old French literature. In her work, she considers cross-cultural encounter and community formation. Dr. Le is also interested in medievalisms as a heuristic for engagement with questions about contemporary issues of identity. Her work has appeared in Comitatus and boundary 2.
