

Ömer Fatih Parlak obtained his PhD in Comparative Literature and Literary Theories at Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona in 2019, with a thesis on the image of the Turk in early modern board games and playing cards. His research areas include history and evolution of board games in various cultures, as well as factors affecting player preferences in which type of games they play in early modern Europe. He is currently teaching the “Games in Cultural History” course in the History Department at Bogazici University, Istanbul, Turkey. Fatih is the editor of Board Game Studies Journal and a member of the International Society of Board Game Studies. He is the co-founder of the Society of the Mediterranean and Black Sea Studies (Medibs). He is organising together with the Mediterranean Worlds (Medworlds) and the Mediterranean Seminar a workshop called “Coexistence in Practice”, to be held in July 2021.
