

Padraic Rohan is a PhD candidate in the history department at Stanford University. Prior to this, he spent eight years in Turkey, working as a researcher and journalist there and throughout the region. He earned a master's degree in Ottoman history from Şehir University in Istanbul before returning to the United States. His research and teaching fields range across medieval and early modern European, Islamic, and world history. His research has been supported by a Fulbright fellowship, and his publications include Saint Paul and the Seven Churches (Istanbul: İpekyolu Yayınları, 2014); "From the Bosphorus to the Atlantic: Genoese responses to the Ottoman conquest," The Medieval Globe 5, no. 1 (2019): 69-107; and "Outsourcing the Colonial Project: the Genoese role in Iberian expansion," World History Bulletin 35, no. 2 (2019): 15-48.