

Elizabeth Terry-Roisin graduated with a Ph.D. in History from the University of California-Berkeley in 2015. She is Assistant Professor of History at Florida International University. Her research focuses on the cultural and social history of early modern Spain, Italy, and the Mediterranean, and she is a second-field medievalist. Themes in her research include the history and literature of the Spanish Renaissance, Moriscos, Jesuits, the Spanish nobility, memory, and the military orders. With Randi Lynn Tanglen, she has published a comparative essay, “Moriscos and Mormons: Captivity Literature on the Spanish and American Frontiers,” in Spain, the United States, and Transatlantic Literary Culture throughout the Nineteenth Century, (Routledge, 2022).
