

Faedah M. Totah is an associate professor at Virginia Commonwealth University in Richmond, VA. She is a trained anthropologist with a research interest in urban issues and place-making. She has worked extensively on the cultural, social, and economic impact of gentrification on the Old City of Damascus. The results of this research were the subject of the book Preserving the Old City of Damascus published in 2014 by Syracuse University Press. She has also authored several articles dealing with Syria and the Middle East. Her current research focus is on migration and refugees in Syria. She is currently preparing a manuscript for publication that examines the experiences of Palestinian urban refugees in the Jewish Quarter of the Old City of Damascus.
