

Koh Choon Hwee is Assistant Professor at the Department of History at UCLA. She uses the sprawling relay postal system to study early modern state formation in the Ottoman empire. Her work has won various prizes, including the Jack Goody Article Prize 2023 (for “The Mystery of the Missing Horses”), the Berkshire Conference Article Prize 2022 (Honorable Mention for “The Ottoman Postmaster”), and the Malcolm Kerr Dissertation Prize (Social Sciences) by the Middle East Studies Association (MESA) in 2020. Before doing her PhD, Koh studied at the American University of Beirut, National University of Singapore, Delhi University, and the University of Arizona.

At UCLA, she is a member of the Ottoman Music Ensemble where she plays the goblet drum (darbouka)-she is not very good but is very enthusiastic. Together with history department colleagues, she helps to run the History Brown Bag Seminar Series (reach out if you are in the area and want to workshop a paper!)
