

Karen Rose Mathews is an Associate Professor in the Department of Art and Art History at the University of Miami. She received her B.A. in Art History from UCLA and her Masters and Ph.D. in Art History from the University of Chicago. She has published extensively on the visual and material culture of the medieval and early modern Mediterranean over the past twenty-five years, addressing topics such as cartography as a new Mediterranean visual system, the relationship between spoils of war and spolia, the development of a common visual language in the late medieval Mediterranean, merchant identity and aesthetics in the Italian maritime republics, and the use and significance of spolia in Christian and Muslim architecture. She has published a monograph entitled Conflict, Commerce, and an Aesthetic of Appropriation in the Italian Maritime Cities, 1000-1150 (Brill, 2018) and served as the lead editor of the interdisciplinary volume A Companion to Medieval Pisa (Brill, 2022). She has received funding from the Graham Foundation, the American Research Center in Egypt, the University of Colorado, and the University of Miami in support of her research on Mamluk art and architecture and has lived and conducted research in Egypt. Her current book project is entitled Making the Mamluks Mediterranean (1250-1517): Spolia, Spectacle, and a Shared Visual Culture.
