

Hugh M. Thomas earned his Ph.D. at Yale and has taught at the University of Miami since 1988. His research focuses on the history of medieval Europe, particularly England, from the eleventh to the early thirteenth century. He is the author of five books: Vassals, Heiresses, Crusaders, and Thugs: The Gentry of Angevin Yorkshire (UPenn Press); The English and the Normans: Ethnic Hostility, Assimilation and Identity after the Norman Conquest, 1066-c. 1220 (Oxford University Press); The Norman Conquest: England after William the Conqueror (Rowman and Littlefield); The Secular Clergy in England, 1066-1216 (OUP); and Power and Pleasure: Court Life under King John, 1199-1216 (OUP). In addition, Thomas has published a number of articles in various journals, including Albion, The English Historical Review, Speculum, and Anglo-Norman Studies. He has also given numerous papers throughout the U.S. and abroad.

Thomas has received research fellowships at the University of Pennsylvania; the National Humanities Center; All Souls College, Oxford University; and the Shelby Cullom Davis Center at Princeton University. He has also received funding from the ACLS and the National Endowment for the Humanities. In fall, 2017, he was a visiting professor at King's College, London, thanks to a Fulbright Fellowship.

He is currently co-editing a mostly unknown text arguing the King Henry II's son, Henry the Young King, was a saint and is also in the early stages of a biography of Henry II.