

Aslı İğsız is Associate Professor of Middle Eastern and Islamic Studies at New York University. Her research interests include political violence, eugenics, humanism, spatial segregation and forced migration, and cultural policy. Her first book Humanism in Ruins: Entangled Legacies of the Greek-Turkish Population Exchange (Stanford University Press) was published in 2018. Humanism in Ruins sought to offer a critique of liberalism from the angle of the management of difference, and explored the underlying racialized logics of population transfers, partitions, segregation, apartheid, and border walls. She recently published two articles on the current refugee crisis, and another one on theorizing palimpsests. Currently she is working on a new project on the notion of fascist utopias in the contemporary world context. This academic year, İğsız is a member in the School of Social Science at the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton, working on this project.
