

Fred Astren is Professor Emeritus in the Department of Jewish Studies at San Francisco State University. He holds a Ph.D. in Near Eastern Studies from the University of California at Berkeley. His current work encompasses Jewish history—in both East and West—in the years 500–950. Recently published is “‘Abbāsīd Book Culture and Ninth-Century Jewish Sectarianism,” in the volume Navigating Language in the Early Islamic World: Multilingualism and Language Change in the First Centuries of Islam, ed. by Antoine Borrut, Manuela Ceballos, and Alison M. Vacca (2023). In preparation is a journal article on the failure of Visigothic anti-Jewish legislation in Spain. He is currently working on a book chapter on Iranian contexts of the eighth-century Jewish messianic figure, Abū ‘Īsā al-Isfahānī. Recent publications include a journal article that examines ways that minority and majority groups “co-produce” historical narratives in medieval Islam (2019) and a chapter in the Cambridge History of Judaism on medieval non-rabbinic Judaisms other than Karaism (2021). Astren is the author of Karaite Judaism and Historical Understanding (University of South Carolina Press, 2004), and co-editor of Judaism and Islam: Boundaries, Interaction, and Communication (Brill, 2000). Astren serves on the Advisory Board of the Mediterranean Seminar.
