

Samuel Cohen is an Associate Professor in the Department of History, California State University, Sonoma. In 2019, he was a Research Fellow at the DFG-Kollegforschergruppe Migration und Mobilität in Spätantike und Frühmittelalter, at Eberhard Karls Universität Tübingen. His research focuses on social and religious conflict and contestation and their relationship to community formation and the construction of authority in the late antique Mediterranean. He is particularly interested in how rhetoric was mobilized to construct and contest meaning and to defend claims to authority as part of the processes of self-definition and exclusion that were central to the emergence of new categories of identity, communities of belief, and institutions. His recent publications include “Eutychianorum furor! Heresiological Polemic and the Invention of ‘Eutychians,’” Entangled Religions 11.4 (2021); “Gelasius and the Ostrogoths: Jurisdiction and Religious Community in late Fifth-Century Italy,” Early Medieval Europe 30.1 (2022); “(Re)creating Sacred Space: Gregory I and the Rededication of ‘Arian’ Church Buildings in Late Antique Rome,” Journal of Early Christian Studies vol. 30.1 (2022), 119-148; and “Nostra Civitas: Heresy, Charity, and Community in Fifth-Century Rome,” Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum 63 (forthcoming, 2022).
