

Arsany Paul completed a master's degree in theology with a dual concentration in liturgical studies and the history of Christianity at the University of Notre Dame (Indiana, USA) and is currently carrying out doctoral work in liturgical studies at the same institute. His research interests broadly encompass the liturgical practices of the Christian East in the premodern era, with a particular interest in the customs of the Coptic Orthodox Church of Egypt. He seeks to furnish editions and translations of unedited Copto-Arabic manuscripts from the late antique to the medieval period to uncover the liturgical diversity of the Alexandrian church. Then, using interdisciplinary methods, provides a commentary on the studied texts through comparative analysis across traditions and by engaging various disciplines such as theological, historical, anthropological, canonical, and material culture. His most recent publication is: "Approaching the Ecclesia in Medieval Coptic Cairo: Church Entrance Petitions from the Thirteenth-Century Copto-Arabic Manuscript Suryān Liturgy 383 (Folia 190r-194r)" Ecclesia orans 39 (2022): 143-173.
