

Galina Rabinovich is a PhD candidate in the Department of General History at the University of Haifa. She has a master's in history from the Altay State University (Russia). She joined The Haifa Center for Mediterranean History (HCMH) in the winter of 2021 with her research project "Discourses of the justification of violence in early Christianity". She focuses on the early Christian discourse of violence and explores the mental reality represented by the discourse, the way the discourse influenced the worldview, and how in turn the worldview normalized practices of violence.
