

Nitzan Raveh is an MA student in the Department of History in Tel-Aviv University, writing his dissertation under the supervision of Dr. Naama Cohen Hanegbi, researching sorcery trials in 14th century England as meeting “sites” between Theology and law/procedure. Nitzan is interested in religious European history, and specifically in the interaction between “supernatural” beliefs and society or law.

Nitzan has a BA and MA in legal studies from Haifa University’s law department, and was a lawyer in a legal practice before turning to history.

Nitzan is visually impaired.