

Kathryn Renton is a historian and communications specialist at the Getty Research Institute. In her research, she explores the “more than human” early modern world, interested in the ways animals and environments have contributed to historical change. Her first book is coming out in May with Cambridge University Press - Feral Empire: Horse and Human in the Early Modern Iberian World. She also teaches classes for the Food Studies Minor at UCLA. She earned her BA from Harvard and her PhD from UCLA.
